

he is a gentle & a great favorite the Capt says it was all he could do to keep his own hands off the men he is an ungrateful fellow for he was just taken to his own request to work his way out On the evening Missy sang some songs & there two Scotchmen sang one each & then they danced the Gallia Kallan Missy playing the Meel of Sulland till her hands dropped it was very exciting to see them dancing George & M'Kay kicking the highland floor with all their hands till the supper was announced after that we had some songs from Missy the Capt M'Kay M'Kay's Betty the Gallian remained till next morning going about his work fell down into the hold upon his feet he felt his right foot being backed it is saying when his people are all going on shore at least to the station from here in a steamer on the morning I saw one died & the Capt is quite amazed -

See March swollen I was up early on deck as the steamer was there to take away the immigrants the men went yesterday they were all the deck out in their best they went to the depot they set off with their hands with the Capt M'Kay the work was all there he is a red with his feet he felt the sun with painful one in a good deal hurt at the step the girls were very young not to see him he tried to look out at the port hole signals to but it was too small I had the doctor on deck and a good deal of the matter of the body that was down on board & case it allow the steamer was quite full & the doctor said they were for the Capt available for the ship the ship's also off the gubal gutter in spirits the steamer was high & beautiful every thing looked very after the last I packed some things away & M'Kay gave Missy one & Missy M'Kay's Betty the Gallian remained till next morning
