At Heliopolis No 1
was Gen Hospital, which was once the Heliopolis Grand Palace Hotel a wonderful place containing about 500 rooms and costing about 1,000,000 to build.
Gave here with enteritis
and a bullet wound
in the jaw.

When we reached Kinross last Sunday morning it was crowded with shipping among the vessels being the "Marselander" but owing to there being such a number of other large vessels there her size was not particularly noticeable. There were several warships
there and a

monitor just being fitted out, it was a very peculiar looking boat. The decks so low that anyone could sit on the deck and dangle
his feet in the water.
I believe they only draw about five or six feet of water so that they are very hard for a raft to hit. Kinross harbour has been further secured by an additional boom
placed across the harbour about 200 yds outside the old boom.
Arriving at Kinross,
I was put on to the
"Southland" and an Antwerp boat called
"Vederland" and we had a very good trip down to Alexandria from which
